Find the GOOD

In our daily lives, it is so easy to focus on what's not right-the traffic, family members inconclusive medical tests, the growing property tax bill. Positive psychologists say it is our innate negativity bias-built in to help us ward off threats to life and limb-that makes it so easy to worry or stress about challenges large and small. Studies show that living a rich, happy and fulfilling life is about looking for, appreciating and savoring what's good in our world and investing the time and effort to make those things even better. Happiness provides not only great mental benefits but amazing health improvements as well that can add active and full years to your life. In search of more good in your life....remember to live in the moment. because
